Contents

Acknowledgements vii

Introduction ix

Aims x
Objectives x
Methodology xi
The Irish Late Bronze Age xi

Chapter 1.0 Addressing ritual in archaeology 1

1.1 Theorising ritual 3
Cognitive archaeology 4
Performance theory 6
Phenomenology 7
Functionalism / Structural-Functionalism 8
Structuralism 10
Practice Theory 11
Structure / System 12
Power / asymmetrical social relations 13
Action / embodied experience 15
Focus on individuality 17
Practice theory and Late Bronze Age ritual in Ireland 17
1.2 Relationships of identity, social roles and ritual practice 19
Archaeologically investigating identity 19
Individual identity 21
Gendered identity 23
Group identity 24
Ritual as the expressions of identity in Late Bronze Age Ireland 25
1.3 The materiality of ritual objects 26
Ritualised materiality in Late Bronze Age Ireland 38

Chapter 2.0 Ritual practice in Late Bronze Age Ireland 39

2.1 Ritual feasting 39
Archaeologically identifying ritual feasts 42
Equipment for feasts 44
Feasting practice in prehistoric Ireland 52
The social institution of feasting 59
2.2 Ritual deposition 60
Categories of ritual deposition 61
Depositional practice 66
Fragmentation, destruction and damage 67

Structured deposition and hoarding 70
Ritual deposition on settlements 75
Wet deposits 78
Patterns in the practice of ritual deposition 85
2.3 Death ritual 85
Death ritual as a process and practice 86
Locations of death ritual 92
Conceptualising Irish Late Bronze Age death ritual practice 100
2.4 Fertility ritual 102
Symbols of fertility 103
Rites of passage 107
Fragmentation for regeneration 111
A cyclical worldview 114
Fertility ritual: pervasive and subtle 122
2.5 The identification of ritual practice in Late Bronze Age Ireland 123

Chapter 3.0 The landscape setting of ritual in Late Bronze Age Ireland 126

3.1 Ritual in the landscape 130
Marking the landscape 131
Entitlement and control over landscapes: the question of Irish hillforts 132
Monuments and monitoring movement 136
Hillforts and routeways 136
Liminal landscapes 140
Natural and cultural boundaries 141
Ritual motivations for movement through the landscape 142
The practice of returning: ritual deposition in the landscape 145
Particular landscapes for particular depositions 146
Visible and invisible locations of ritual practice 148
Connections to the landscape: death ritual, ancestral ties and cyclicality 150
Relationships between death ritual monuments 150
Longevity of use: Ballyconneely flat cemetery, Co. Clare 153
Symbolic associations: fertility ritual in different landscapes 157
Rituals in domestic and natural landscapes 158
Domestic fertility in a wild landscape: Glencurran Cave, Co. Clare 160
Contextualising the landscape setting of Irish Late Bronze Age ritual practice 164

Chapter 4.0 The social context of ritual practice in Late Bronze Age Ireland 168

4.1 Identity, social roles and ritual in Late Bronze Age Ireland 168
Material culture: archaeologically identifying identity 168
The negotiation of identity at feasts 169
Objects as representative of identity 171
Death and the re-structuring of social identity 172
Identity formation through social interaction 175
Expressing and manipulating identity through ritual practice 183
4.2 Exotic items & long-distance socio-political interactions 184
The archaeology of interaction 185
Long-distance interaction in the Bronze Age 187
The exotic in Irish Late Bronze Age ritual practice 192
Integrating the exotic with the insular 196
4.3 Identity and interaction in Late Bronze Age ritual practice 197

Chapter 5.0 Ritual in Late Bronze Age Ireland 200

References 207